Three Main Takeaways:

BECOME INFORMED.

ASSESS YOUR ABILITIES.

FORM AN OPINION.

Become informed:

What are audiences talking about? (think pieces, social media)

What do writers of the genre discuss? (Twitter, blogs, webinars)

IMHO it's not enough to Google the difference, it's best to experience them yourself before forming an opinion.

Assess your abilities:

What are you confident about in your “safe” genre?

What elements have you mastered?

What needs improvement?

How much of a change is it to a different genre and why?

Type into the chat your genre of preference and why.

Questions to ask during your research:

What are genre differences?

What sets similar genres apart?

What are audiences looking for?

What are audiences sick of?

What stereotypes or tropes exist in this genre?

What are unique elements of a particular genre?

Some immediate and obvious answers:

- Audience changes.
- Word count requirements often change.
- Style of writing is different.

BUT

- More fluid elements: world-building/setting, dialogue, exposition, character description, story arcs/pacing.
- Some genres have more wiggle room to play and explore than others. Take note of roadblocks and stubborn audiences.

Form an opinion.

- Remember it's important to understand guidelines but develop your own style and opinions.
- Opinions can differ (so take stock in what makes sense to you).
- On that note, it might feel overwhelming, so do your research in a way that makes sense and is comfortable to you.
- Reach out to those audiences with your thoughts and questions!

So, why write in a new genre? (Part 1)

Reasons why:

- Determine what you need to know and have a clear understanding of it before you start writing.
- Test your abilities. What can you not wait to tackle in your new favorite genre? Could you write something different to make the genre you dislike “better”?
- Challenge your negative responses to certain genres, always look for similarities, elements you like, or ways to make things “better”.
- Bring your new flavor of writing to that genre (to me this is the most exciting part!)

So, why write in a new genre? (Part 2)

Ways to master it:

- Ask yourself: what is it about that new genre that is drawing you in?
- Do a close reading analysis to familiarize yourself so you don't end up "winging it" (although winging it is sometimes fun)
- Study popularized genres and take in lots of mediums: graphic novels, movies, TV, etc.
- Do side-by-side comparison between new and familiar/ "safe"
- Pick one element such as character descriptions/visual portrayals what makes them different/similar? Form your own opinion and enhance your expertise!

“Four steps” (Companion handout questions):

STEP ONE: Ask yourself important questions! Journal, write out your angst (use the handout)

STEP TWO: Become informed by doing your research (vary your mediums, handout has examples)

STEP THREE: Take stock of your abilities (handout). Be honest about where you need to improve.

STEP FOUR: Set Goals. Where are you now and where do you want to be?

Three Main Takeaways:

BECOME

ASSESS YOUR ABILITIES.

OPINION.

Last minute pro-tips:

(Join a writer's group) Co-write something for practice with a writer friend (you bring the dialogue and let them handle the hard science, or vice versa)

(Find a mentor) Crowdsource ideas from genre experts. Ask them what's missing from the genre or what they want more of.

Stay true to the genre, but also true to you.

Surprises await you!
